

What are the best ways to let students know?

1. Suggestions to support account sign-up:
 - Consider making a homework assignment of signing up for a College Board account; encourage all students to hold on to their account username and password.
 - Challenge all AP students in your school to sign up for their College Board accounts by a chosen date.
 - Create a contest between AP classes to see which class can get all its students signed up first.
2. Make sure students remember apscore.org — students can sign up for their College Board account here and it's where they will access their scores in July. This website also features important updates and reminders.
3. Share the “How to Get Your AP Scores Online” video with students available at collegeboard.org/shareap.
4. Encourage students to create their own video about how to get scores and post to your school website.
5. Use the PA announcements, automated telephone scripts, email templates, and website banner ads provided in the toolkit (some pieces only available online) to remind students and parents of how to access scores.

What can students do on the apscore.org website?

The apscore.org website is the only way students can access their scores. Students will be able to view, download and print their score reports from the website, and they must use the system to send official score reports to colleges, universities, and scholarship programs (beyond the free score report they can send via their AP answer sheet).

Please encourage your students to explore apscore.org. It contains FAQs, and valuable information about score reporting services, credit and placement policies, and how AP connects to majors and careers.

Quick Tips to Help Students Remember Their AP Number*:

- Email their AP number and/or student ID number to themselves.
- Make a copy of the AP number card and give it to a parent or guardian.
- File the AP number card in a safe place and email themselves the location.

* Students should not share their AP number with other students.
